PIOMBINO ALTO
PIOMBINO BASSO

By Andreas Haußmann

PIOMBINO ALTO
PIOMBINO BASSO

Thick steel tube, nuts and screws, a tabletop - a PIOMBINO table consists of recurring elements. The legs rise up from the ground, just to turn ninety degrees at the right spot and to hold the top plate. The overlapping silhouettes remind of urban and industrial zones, a harbour, Berlin streets where the ground-water is regulated by enormous systems of tubular steel, where all the geometrical shapes melt together, confusion. Its seven different versions allow versatile application, they fit together, they can stand alone.

PIOMBINO merges into Atelier Haußmanns collection like it has been part of it ever since.

Material

Table top:
25 mm thick composite panel covered on both sides with Duropal HPL, M6 screw sockets.
Art.-Nr. #2415 available with a gray 10 mm Parsol glass plate.

PIOMBINO BASSO

This PIOMBINO BASSO version offers with nearly two and a half meter enough space for various applications. The Frame is easily set up just by applying four screws, rubber pads avoid the table top from shifting. The long PIOMBINO BASSO stands out among the other tables of the series because construction and Frame remain visible through the glass.

LÁSZLÓ

Chair
By André Weißert

LÁSZLÓ

Essentially formed from two bent steel tubes, LÁSZLÓ is a pleasingly logical piece of design, one which lets the construction dictate the form, without completely abdicating its responsibility for the functionality: the angle of seat and backrest provide a high degree of sitting comfort, something supported, as it were by the natural buoyancy of the steel tube construction. The stretcher between the sunken front legs neatly allowing for a rage of alternative sitting positions.

Material

Frame:

SPRING

Stool
By Federic Sonnenberg and
Lukas Semmler

SPRING

Constructed from steel rods connected to a metal base and wooden seat the SPRING stool is at first a neatly reduced object whose simplicity and clarity makes a very self-confident nod to the early days of American Mid-Century Modernism; and is at second a thoroughly satisfying sitting experience, for the steel rods are spring steel rods and consequently the stool moves, rocks, gently with you.

AFFE

Trestle
By Thesenfitz & Wedekind

AFFE

A height adjustable trestle made of flat and round steel. It is applicable with several shelves and slabs. Thesenfitz & Wedekind called themselves lucky to find something that perfect in form – something that can only be found, not invented. Atelier Haußmann made the trestle fashionable again by manufacturing it in the traditional way with small Berlin craft producers.

PETITE TABLE D’ANGLE

Side table
By Hervé Humbert

Maritaca (Brasil), Nr. 11 Rosa Portogallo (Portugal)

PETITE TABLE D'ANGLE

"PETITE TABLE D'ANGLE" is an unusual table object in which Humbert blurs the boundaries between art and design. The series developed for Atelier Haußmann is comprised of 31 unique objects each consisting of a remnant marble slab with a breakpoint, surrounded by a steel angle frame which has been individually composed to match the random shape of the slabs, yet remaining open at the breakpoint. Unexpected perspectives occur as a result of this tabletop which juts out like a cliff hanging over the frame and the arrangement of the table legs is reminiscent of architectural structures.
The "small corner table" is a game of confronting common habits of seeing. In this first pursuit of Humbert to create purely an object of design, he follows the same approach as he does in his art works. He does not look for suitable forms for an industrial implementation of his idea, he devotes himself to the material instead. The result, a sculpture which functions as a piece of furniture.
Issues of sustainability concerning the reuse of the marble slabs deemed use- less for conventional use, are just as much integrated in "PETITE TABLE D'ANGLE" as the traces on the materials which bear witness of the extraction and further manufacturing processes, because they remain, just like the different grains suggesting the country of origin, as an image and a history. The value of the marble now is measured in terms of its visually palpable story that may not be polished away. The marble relic turns into a piece of Land Art bestowed with a suitable form of representation.

Material	Frame made of steel (L-profile 25 x 25*3 mm), powder-coating (solvent-free polyester resin), marble slab, rubber spacers, brass plate.

BLUMENAMPEL EDITION

BLUMENAMPEL EDITION comes with a rubber vase handmade by Birgit Severin. Both designers, Zascho Petkow and Birgit Severin, developed their projects (BLUMENAMPEL and the ASHES series) independently from each other.
BLUMENAMPEL EDITION combines the newest production techniques with handcraft. A novel type of materiality was developed through combining 3-D printing with rubber rotation casting, resulting in a rough, matt surface, covered with a sparkling pattern of jewel-like points.

Material Ø 22 mm steel tube, powder-coating (solvent-free polyester resin), rubber vase, PP rope, hook, dowel.
